[NY 3164-S] advised that during his talk, MARK LANE discussed only those matters that have previously been made public and he furnished no new information that had not previously been contained in his article in the "National Guardian". The informant advised that although LANE was scheduled to play tapes of his interviews with OSWALD's mother, LANE indicated that he could not play the tapes because there now exists a client-counsel relationship between he and Mrs. OSWALD.

(C)(u)
[NY 3164-S] advised that in a conversation with HARRY RING, RING indicated that the SWP publication "The Militant" wanted to run an ad in the "New York Post" on 1/23/64 and 1/24/64, but although the ad was accepted, the editorial board of the "New York Post" subsequently refused to accept the ad. RING further advised that someone from the SWP had spoken to JAMES WESCHLER, a member of the editorial board, about the newspaper not accepting the ad; but WESCHLER stated that he could not give an answer or reason for the refusal. According to the informant, MARK LANE has suggested that The Militant Labor Forum sue the "New York Post" for loss of revenue.
